“Year in which degrees were conferred” includes graduates from September to August (such as September 2010 thru Aug 2011).

The program will admit students who have completed prior graduate training at another program (i.e., “students entering the program with advanced standing”). This includes students who enter with a completed master’s degree. The program requires a total of 81 credit hours, and 30 hours of previous graduate training will be applied towards those 81 if they are relevant and similar to the program’s course offerings. For example, if an admitted student has taken “Adult Abnormal Psychology” from another graduate program, he/she will very likely be credited with having completed the requirement for that course in the program (with 3 credits granted toward the 81 required).

Implications for Time to Completion

Receiving credit for previous graduate study will likely reduce time to completion. In their first two years, students in the program take 24 credits per year. So granting 30 credits to a student with prior graduate study is the equivalent of 1.25 years. If students also enter with prior clinical experience (e.g., their master’s degree was in a clinical, counseling or social work program), then their time to completion is even more likely to be reduced, since the previous clinical training might mean they need less time to complete necessary clinical training in the program. However, if students prior graduate work was not in a clinical field (e.g., their master’s degree was in experimental psychology), then their time to completion may not be significantly reduced by prior graduate training. Like students without prior graduate work, they will need time to obtain sufficient clinical experiences.
