What is the Criminology and Law Society?

Marquette University's Criminology and Law Society dedicates time and effort to helping students interested in the fields of criminal justice and the law realize their potential. This goal is accomplished by promoting interactions with various professionals in the criminal justice field. It is our goal that your participation in the Marquette Criminology and Law Society will serve as a stepping stone to your success and accomplishments in the future.

How can the Criminology and Law Society benefit me?

The society works to enlighten the entire Marquette community with information concerning the many facets of the criminal justice and law professions. The society provides opportunities for close interaction from various experts from the field through seminars and demonstrations. Those who are invited to speak will work to provide all the society members with an understanding of how their chosen professions impact the criminal justice field. Becoming involved in the Criminology and Law Society allows members to meet both professors and other students with common interests outside of the classroom environment.

How can I join?

Joining the Criminology and Law Society is easy. Simply fill out the membership form and turn in your application. A one-time $25 membership fee is required to join. Checks should be made payable to the Marquette University Criminology and Law Society.
